I believe that the anti-trust laws are non-objective and unconstitutional. Only coercion can cause a monopoly to form, which means only firms that are run and/or supported by the government can forcibly restrict competition from entering a field and be monopolies (e.g., the US Postal Service, the medallion cabs in New York City). We would not even have a computer industry if it weren't for Microsoft. The government has no means to give us a computer industry, but it thinks it has the power to suppress firms in it at will. I say laissez-faire, leave it alone! Leave Microsoft alone and stop persecuting big business. Businessmen have a right to life, liberty and property, too, without being regulated out of existence by "Big Brother."
